

LONDON 2012: ONE YEAR TO GO

The Princess Royal has disclosed the London 2012 gold awards as the one-year commencement to the Olympics started. The decorations portray the Greek goddess of triumph, Nike, going out of the portrayal of the Panathenaic to touch base in the host city. Thousands assembled in Trafalgar Square where David Cameron guaranteed London's might be the "best amusements". Then, jumper Tom Daley performed the first official sloop at the Aquatics Centre, the most recent venue finished.

Synchronised swimmers structured the most obvious for London 2012 director Lord Coe and International Olympic Committee (IOC) president Jacques Rogge.

At Trafalgar Square, Mr Rogge and London Mayor Boris Johnson welcomed the world to go to the British funding to commend the Games next summer. Mr Johnson gloated that London is as of now so primed for the 2012 Games that "we should call a snap Olympics tomorrow".
